ABSTRACT

This directory is intended as a source of information on the types and sources of assistance available to support the information, education, communication (IEC) components of population/family planning programs in developing countries. Forty international agencies are identified as involved in supporting the IEC components of population/family planning programs. The directory is organized into two major divisions. The first gives interregional or headquarter offices of all applicable agencies; these are divided into three categories: multilateral, bilateral, and private. The second major division lists all regional, sub-regional, and country offices of these agencies, as well as several agencies that are only regional in scope. This division has sections devoted to four of the basic geographical regions of the developing world: Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Oceania. Nine basic types of IEC related assistance are identified and listed next to the agency name with code letters. These are: advisors/consultants, broad spectrum projects, equipment, fellowships, materials, program personnel, research/evaluation, seminars/workshops for population awareness, and training programs. Addresses are provided for each agency, giving, where appropriate, those for the headquarters, regional, and country offices. (BL)

INTRODUCTION AND USER'S GUIDE

Purpose

This Directory of IEC Assistance is intended as a source of information on the types and sources of assistance available to support the information, education, communication (IEC) components of population/family planning programs in developing countries. Such information is expected to be of primary value to the administrators of action programs, but it also has relevance to social science researchers interested in conducting research in this area, to population training institutes, to those working for development assistance agencies, etc. Basically the Directory indicates the type of assistance available from some forty agencies that have been identified as involved in supporting the IEC components of population/family planning programs. Addresses are provided for each agency, giving, where appropriate, those for the headquarters, regional, and country offices.

Preparation of the Directory

The Directory was developed by the East-West Communication Institute as part of its ongoing "inventory-analysis" of support for the communication dimensions of population programs, which is being conducted under a grant from the U.S. Agency for International Development. Information is included for every major and most minor international agencies that have been identified by the Institute as providing such support. Decisions as to the type of support provided by each agency have been based on interviews with agency representatives and other data collected by the inventory-analysis staff.

Definitions

For the purpose of this Directory, "population/family planning information, education, communication," (IEC), has been defined as public or mass information, informal or community education, in-school or population education or other forms of information, education, and communication intended to increase knowledge, change attitudes, or bring about a change in practices in regard to population and/or family planning. Training is included only to the extent that it is intended to increase competence in the IEC area. Basic reference materials, information services, conferences, and the like are excluded if the primary audience is professionals in the field of population/family planning. The focus, in other words, is on support for communications activities aimed at audiences beyond the immediate staffs of population/family planning programs. "Assistance" refers to the provision of both cash grants and of actual services such as advisors and consultants, fellowships, materials, equipment, training, etc. The full range of assistance activities covered by the Directory is listed below under the heading "Types of Assistance."

Using the Directory

The Directory is organized into two major divisions. The first gives the interregional or headquarters offices of all applicable agencies; these are divided into three categories: multilateral, bilateral, and private. The second major division lists all the regional, sub-regional, and country offices of these and of several additional agencies that are only regional in scope. This division of the Directory consists of sections devoted to each of the four basic geographical regions of the developing world, viz., Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Oceania. Within each geographical area, listings are given first for regional and sub-regional offices and then for country offices, which are arranged alphabetically by country. When the list of specific countries served by a regional office was available, the country names appear in parentheses after the name of that regional office. Within each division or section, the names of organizations are always listed alphabetically.

Types of Assistance

Decisions about the types of assistance provided by each agency within the field of population/family planning IEC are based largely on information available to the East-West Communication Institute on the past grant making and support activities of the agencies listed. In other words, the categories of assistance assigned to each agency are based primarily on precedent established over the past several years rather than on explicit policy statements. Nine basic types of assistance have been identified and each assigned a nonarbitrary code letter, generally the first letter of the word or phrase used to describe that category. The code letters appear next to the name of the agency the first time that agency is listed in the Directory, i.e., in almost all cases in the section on "Interregional (headquarters) Offices." This classification scheme does not distinguish between grants made to enable recipient organizations to procure for themselves any given form of assistance and the actual provision of that service directly by the assisting agency. The codes used throughout the Directory for types of IEC related assistance are listed below.

A -Advisors/consultants
B -Broad spectrum projects (i.e. pilot projects, etc., that include two or more of the other types of assistance listed here)
E -Equipment
F -Fellowships
M-Materials
P -Program personnel
R -Research/evaluation
S -Seminars, workshops, etc., for population awareness
T -Training programs

Country-Level Offices

No attempt has been made to list each and every potentially relevant country-level office of the agencies whose headquarters and regional offices appear in the Directory. Generally the bilateral assistance activities of donor nations are handled at the country level by members of their embassy or high commission staffs. This Directory does not list the addresses of embassies and high commissions. It does, however, include the offices of separate bilateral technical assistance agencies to the extent that these have been established at the country level. The country-level representatives of various United Nations specialized agencies have not been routinely included here. The best source of information about the locations and activities of such offices is the office of the Resident Representative of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); consequently the Directory provides information on the location of UNDP offices throughout the developing world. Besides functioning to coordinate the contributions of other agencies in the U.N. system, the UNDP administers the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) and hence the UNDP Resident Representatives also play a key role in determining the kind of assistance that the UNFPA might best render.

Revision of this Edition

Inevitably some of the information in a directory of this nature is out-of-date by the time it is published in spite of all reasonable attempts to obtain the most recent information. It is not possible, naturally, for the East-West Communication Institute to assume responsibility for any inconvenience caused by such inaccuracies. However, all corrections that are brought to the Institute's attention will be incorporated into the next edition of the Directory. Suggestions for other changes and alterations in the organization, format, and content of the Directory will also be appreciated. Please send all communications about the Directory, including requests for additional copies, to:

The East-West Center

The East-West Center—formally known as "The Center for Cultural and Technical Interchange Between East and West"—was established in Hawaii by the United States Congress in 1960. The Center's goal is to promote better understanding and relations among the peoples of Asia, the Pacific area and the United States. As a national educational institution in cooperation with the University of Hawaii, the East-West Center focuses its programs of education, research and training on seeking solutions to vital problems of mutual concern.

Each year about 1,000 students, Senior Fellows, Fellows and professional study and training participants at the teaching and management levels come to the East-West Center from more than 30 different countries and territories under federal grants and scholarships. Several hundred more men and women receive training annually at field workshops and refresher courses conducted in the Asian/Pacific area by East-West Center instructional teams co-sponsored by local governments and agencies.

The Center's programs are conducted by the East-West Communication Institute, the East-West Culture Learning Institute, the East-West Food Institute, the East-West Population Institute, and the East-West Technology and Development Institute.

East-West Communication Institute

The East-West Communication Institute is one of several problem-oriented institutes established at the East-West Center to focus the Center's resources in education, research and training on seeking solutions to common problems of East-West concern.

The Institute concentrates on the use of communication in economic and social development, and in sharing of knowledge across cultural barriers.

The Institute:

Awards scholarships for graduate study in communication and related disciplines, primarily at the University of Hawaii;

Invites Senior Fellows to the Center for study and research in communication, and for development of training projects;

Conducts a variety of professional study and training projects for communication workers in specialized fields of economic and social development;

Assembles for an international Document Collection relevant communication materials with emphasis on Asian and Pacific material and makes these available for students, scholars, and government administrators, both at the Center and elsewhere;

Offers Jefferson Fellowships for Asian, Pacific and U.S. journalists for a semester at the Center and the University of Hawaii designed to increase their background knowledge and enhance their professional competence;

Assists in designing and carrying out research in communication;

Arranges conferences and seminars relating to new and pertinent areas of communication;

Conducts a worldwide inventory and analysis of support for population and family planning communication and education being provided to developing countries by donor agencies.
